“Climate Change Communication” Webinar

The Office of Sustainability hosted a webinar on Climate Change Communication with a speaker from the Yale Program at the Environmental Education Center on June 2, 2016. It was very well attended by nine faculty, staff, students, and a community member. We learned the importance of speaking about climate change with words that people directly relate to in a conversation. An example of that is “global warming will affect future generations” where a more personal approach such as “global warming will affect your children and grandchildren” is more effective way of getting the point across. Look for our webinar announcements in Hotline—everyone is welcome!
